

Remarks

In response to an Office action dated April 22, 2008 and in preparation for appeal, attached are five representative examples of applicant's system wherein a first expression (i.e., You can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink) is translated into a second expression (It is infeasible to oblige potation through it is feasible to navigate a dobbin to a rill). As a second step, which makes up the game, the student tries to decipher the first expression from the second expression, using as few of the clues as possible for the lesser known words in the second expression. The clues being definitions for dobbin, potation, oblige and rill.

Using the definitions for dobbin, potation, oblige and rill, the second expression translates as "It is not possible to force a drink through it is possible to steer a work horse to a stream" which is not a direct translation of the first expression. However by learning the words in the second expression, the student may be able to decipher the second expression back into the first expression (You can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink).

Alam discloses three decks of cards, a first deck having prefixes, a second deck having root words and a third deck having suffixes. A definition for each prefix, root and suffix is provided on the back of the card together with a word example wherein the prefix, root or suffix is used.

In Alam's Figs. 1 and 2, "PRE", "TEND" and "ING" is the equivalent of applicant's "second expression" with the definitions (before-to stretch-conveys idea) provided on the back of the cards. There is no second step in Alam, no deciphering "before-to stretch-conveys idea" back into a "first expression."

On Mankoff's playing cards, the word to be learned and its definition is provided in multiple-choice form. This is distinctly different from applicant's education system wherein a first expression consisting of a word or phrase is translated into lesser known words which forms a second expression. Upon grasping the meaning of the lesser known words by using clues which give the definition of the lesser known words, the student may decipher the first expression from the translation of the second expression into common words.

In Mankoff's Fig. 2, "ANTITHESIS" is the equivalent of applicant's "second expression" and multiple choice "7) the opposite" is the definition of the word. There is no second step in Mankoff. No deciphering "ANTITHESIS" into a "first expression" which the definition "the opposite" hints at.

In summary, there is no teaching, suggestion or motivation in Alam, Mankoff or in the knowledge generally available to one of ordinary skill in the art which makes obvious the system of applicant's claims.

In view of the above remarks, it is believed that the claims are patentable over Alam in view of Mankoff. Reconsideration of the application and allowance of the claims are respectfully requested.

Respectfully submitted,
